Navigating Career Pathways

Thinking about careers can be a daunting proposition for any young person, more-so for young people with a care experience. It's crucial that the significant adults in the lives of care experienced young people support and facilitate these conversations, promoting the young person's strengths, interests and aspirations.

Below is a quick list of useful websites to support young people to explore careers pathways. These can be used as tools to explore different opportunities, start conversations and build plans. It is recommended that young people are linked with their career advisors at their secondary school. Careers advisors can support development of a Career Action Plan from years 7-12, arrange work experience, and are a great source of information for local programs and pathways.

For a comprehensive guide to support care experienced young people in their transition to post-school study, training and work, see the Life After School Guide from Raising Expectations.
